My dear Mr McElligott:

I am writing first to enclose the check in payment of the jackets that were lost in transit for so long. I will be expecting the size 44 as soon as it is finished.

Now I am afraid I have been careless, or I prefer to think it was inexperience, in signing the receipt for the package without discovering it had been opened. I am sure the express company knew it but when it was delivered to me it was put down on the side that had been opened. I did not discover it until the box was emptied.

If the insurance company will send an investigator to examine the box, I know they cannot help seeing what happened. I will keep it until I hear from you that it will not do any good.

Very Truly Yours
